DIRECTOR'S NOTE

“Mother Tongue” is a work in progress based on Brecht’s “Mother Courage and Her Children” and 35 interviews with Brazilian waste pickers—commonly understood in the U.S. as informal garbage collectors who pick, sort and sell recyclable materials as a way of living. The making of this piece has been a collaborative endeavor amongst many, and now, after 10 weeks of an intense rehearsal process, we are glad to open the doors of our process to the UNCSA community.

My journey with this piece started two years ago during my time at Studio For Creative Practice—UNCSA's first interdisciplinary course. Since then, this piece has developed into research around questions of motherhood, accumulation of waste and our relationship to the unwitnessed lives of the people who collect our trash. Since the mid 20th century, the discard of our non-degradable waste has involved great travels through space and time, reaching our oceans, foreign countries and future underlands. Nowadays, according to The Guardian, 70% of plastic waste consumed in America ends up in foreign countries, and every year several U.S. waste containers are sent illegally to the shores of Latin American countries such as Brazil.

Our waste has become a part of stories ingrained in distances and “Mother Tongue” proposes that, in times when our own ways of living threaten the well being of our planet, we shift our focus to the unwitnessed voices of waste pickers—powerful voices—capable of extending our compassion across the distances between our trash cans and foreign hands; between pain and memory; and between us and people we won’t live to see. —Marina Zurita

DRAMATURG’S NOTE

Every day throughout Brazil, hundreds of thousands of pickers, or catadores in Portuguese, comb through the solid materials either discarded by the country’s more than 210 million residents or exported to Brazil from other nations. Pickers collect paper, plastic, glass, aluminum and other metals, frequently amid hazardous environmental conditions. They transport these materials to processing facilities, sort and organize them and resell them to companies who utilize them to produce new goods.

Without the informal labor of this fleet of green-collar workers, millions of tons of recyclable materials would end up in landfills. Though not formally employed by Brazilian public institutions like municipal governments, pickers perform an essential public service. Some estimates hold that pickers contribute to the processing of 90% of Brazil’s recycled materials. Other countries throughout the world, especially those in the Global South, similarly depend on pickers for recycling streams and waste management. Even New York City has its own cadre of between 8,000-10,000 pickers, known locally as canners, who scour city streets for reusable material.

While pickers perform essential labor worldwide, their work has long been unrecognized by government officials and stigmatized by society at large. This dynamic has begun to shift in recent years, however. Over the last three decades, coalitions of pickers in countries like Brazil and Colombia have led effective movements for greater rights and recognition. Brazilian federal law now grants pickers some protections and benefits as laborers, and Brazilian cities are now officially incentivized to coordinate with pickers in their waste management programs. The inclusion of pickers in state-coordinated recycling streams in Brazil has influenced public policy in other countries. The grassroots movement that brought about these changes has deep roots in the city of São Paulo at a local picker-led recycling cooperative where materials are sorted and sold. Some of the stories in "Mother Tongue" were inspired by the workers at this cooperative.

Even as the labor of pickers has become more recognized, the lives of pickers themselves remains shrouded in stigma and prejudice. With "Mother Tongue," we invite audiences to cross these barriers of misunderstanding and connect with the inner and outer lives of these essential workers. —Andrew G. Britt

BIOGRAPHY

Marina Zurita (director) is a theatre director born in Brazil, poised to graduate from UNCSA’s school of Drama (directing). At UNCSA, Marina has directed the Mainstage "Love & Depositions;" and the Keys to the Kingdom shows "Heroes of the Fourth Turning" (by Will Arbery) and "Yerma" (by Simon Stone). Zurita hopes to create work that invites us to rediscover ourselves in the people we have ceased to see or pay attention to. This mission is present in her thesis project, "Mother Tongue"—a work in progress developed in collaboration with an abundant creative team. Zurita is very excited to open the doors to the process of creating "Mother Tongue" to the UNCSA community and she is very grateful for her friends, family and mentors for all the support they've given her along the way.

Andrew G. Britt (dramaturg) is a historian of contemporary Latin America and a digital scholarship developer with a national focus on Brazil. He is an assistant professor in the Division of Liberal Arts at UNCSA. His research examines race and space in the city of São Paulo, a frenetic, magnetic metropolis of more than 20 million. He completed his doctorate at Emory University in 2018 and is currently revising the dissertation into a book entitled “The Paradoxes of Ethnicracial Space in São Paulo, 1930s-1980s.” “Mother Tongue” was his first foray into the beautiful world of dramaturgy.

THE SCHOOL OF DRAMA

Ranked among the best drama schools in the world, the School of Drama is an immersive experience that prepares talented young artists for successful careers on stage, online, and in film and television. Conservatory training grounded in classical values adds technical skills practice to shape creatively inspired, versatile actors who are in-demand today. Students perform constantly in both small workshops and major productions across the theatrical repertory. An outstanding resident faculty gives personalized attention to their students’ growth.

THE SCHOOL OF DESIGN & PRODUCTION

Unlike other schools that incorporate design and production within theatre studies programs, the School of Design and Production is a highly regarded, independent conservatory. The school is ranked #3 in the nation. Employing a resident faculty of experienced professionals, the school offers a comprehensive curriculum in every aspect of modern stagecraft, from scene design to stage management. Students gain practical experience working on a variety of productions inside theaters of all styles and sizes, and within 100,000 square feet of production space. Graduates have careers in theater, film, television, dance, opera, live and themed entertainment, and more.
DEAN’S COUNCILS FOR UNCSA

The Dean’s Councils support each of UNCSA’s five arts schools - Dance, Design & Production, Drama, Filmmaking, and Music. Dean’s Council members support the school of their choosing with an annual gift of $5,000 or more, work closely with the Dean to advance that school’s mission and fundraising priorities, and enjoy a deeper relationship with the Dean and students of the school. If you are interested in joining one of these groups of committed individuals, please contact Vice Chancellor for Advancement Lissy Garrison at 336-770-3329 or whittingtonr@uncsa.edu.

UNCSA MANIFESTO

We Believe

Artists enrich our culture, enlighten our society, lift our spirits, and feed our souls.

Integrative arts education from an early age sparks a lifetime of creative thinking, powerful self-expression, and innovative problem solving.

Rigorous artistic training empowers our students and graduates to engage our communities, advance local and global creative industries, and inspire the world.

Arts organizations improve the quality of life and place in big cities and small communities, transforming them from merely livable to truly lovable.

UNC School of the Arts nurtures the talent, hones the craft, and develops the unique voices of emerging artists. We realize the full potential of exceptionally creative and passionate students to do their best work and become their best selves.

LAND ACKNOWLEDGMENT

It is important for many of us, as settle-descended persons, to consider how the land we occupy continues to interrupt the cultural, linguistic, historical and political connections that indigenous peoples have to this land. We must continue to recognize how we have, wittingly and unwittingly, remained as actors in the colonization of what we regard as our original context of teaching and learning. UNCSA is on the ancestral land of the Tuleo, Sappony, Catawba and Keyauwee tribes.

A land acknowledgment gives honor to and recognizes indigenous territories and indigenous people respective to the location(s) we currently work and live. A land acknowledgment serves as a reminder that the land you currently occupy has long been occupied by indigenous peoples who have a distinct linguistic, cultural and historical connection to the land.

April 24, 2022 | 2 p.m.
Agnes de Mille Theatre

“Volpone” (“The Fox”), 2004, is a bright, biting comedy inspired by the classic Ben Jonson play of the same name.

The wealthy Volpone feigns mortal illness in order to con a group of his so-called “friends” into believing that each of them will inherit his fortune. The lengths to which they go in the name of greed make for an evening of high humor.
